Part F: Read the texts and answer questions 41-60.

TEXT I

[1] In Hollywood, everybody wants to be rich, famous, and beautiful. Nobody wants to be old, unknown, and poor. For Hollywood kids, life can be difficult because they grow up in such an unreal atmosphere. Their parents are ambitious, and the children are part of the parents' ambitions. Parents pay for extravagant parties, expensive cars, and designer clothes. When every dream can come true, kids learn the value of nothing because they have everything.

[2] A 13-year-old boy, Trent Maguire, has a driver, credit cards, and unlimited cash to do what he wants when he wants. 'One day, I'll earn more than my Dad,' he boasts. Parents buy care and attention for their children because they have no time to give it themselves. Amanda's mother employs a personal trainer, a nutritionist, a bodyguard/chauffeur, a singing coach, and a counsellor to look after all her 15-year-old daughter's needs. Often there is no parent at home most days, so children decide whether to make their own meals or go out to restaurants, when to watch television or do homework. They organize their own social lives. They play no childhood games. However, they become adults before they're ready.

[3] Hollywood has always been the city of dreams. The kids in L.A. live unreal lives where money, beauty, and pleasure are the only gods. Will children around the world soon start to think the same? Or do they already?

TEXT II

[1] People in the United States have a choice between free tax-funded public schools or tuition-based private schools. All public school systems are required to provide an education free of charge to everyone of school age.

[2] All schools, public and private, are monitored by the Department of Education. Educational standards and standardized testing decisions are made by state governments. People are required to attend school until the age of 16–18. If a child is not attending school, the parents will be in trouble and could possibly go to jail. Education is divided into three levels: elementary, junior high, and senior high. Grade levels in each vary from area to area.

AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA

[3] Elementary school, also known as grade school, is the school of the first six grades. The basic subjects of math, English and science are taught. Junior high school is grades 5–8, depending upon the school structure. The basic subjects are expanded on. A foreign language is often added. High school runs from grades 9–12. Each grade number also has a name: freshman, sophomore, junior and senior. There are a minimum number of courses students are required to complete to receive a high school diploma. Starting in ninth grade, grades become very important because they are part of a student's official transcript. In the last two years of high school students take standardized tests to apply for college. The SAT and ACT are the most common standardized tests.

[4] Post-secondary education in the United States is known as college or university. It consists of four years, or more, of study. Students apply to receive admission into college. Admissions criteria involve the grades earned in high school, and their GPA and standardized test scores. After finishing a four-year degree, students may continue to a more advanced degree such as a Master's degree.

[5] As a whole, the population of the United States is becoming more educated. Post-secondary education is valued very highly by American society and is one of the main determinants of class and status.

46. We can infer from paragraph 2 that _____.

a. some parents are having trouble with school administration
b. there are parents who were sent to jail at the age of 16-18
c. attending college after the age of 18 is compulsory

TEXT III

[1] Few hobbies combine collecting Roman artefacts, medieval coins, and discovering bodies. However, the very British hobby of mudlarking is making a comeback. Mudlarking is a pastime that has become more popular in the last few years in London. It involves going to the River Thames at low tide and digging in the mud for valuable objects. A person who goes mudlarking is called a mudlark.

[2] Mudlarking has its origins in 18th-Century London. But in those days, it wasn't a hobby at all. It was actually a way for many children – and those too old to be employed – to survive. This was at a time when there were hardly any bridges crossing the river, so most people caught boats across. Getting on and off the boats, people dropped things. These were then found by mudlarks, the poorest level of society, who sold them to earn money, which would hopefully be just enough for a meal.

[3] Steve Brooker is a modern-day mudlark and he's had this unusual hobby for 30 years. He's found everything from glass bottles and clay pots, to coins dating from Roman times right up to the present day. He says he has found many extraordinary things, but finding a human skeleton was particularly terrifying. He later found out the bones were 300 years old, but even so, it's an experience he is happy he hasn't repeated. Steve often goes to the river near where he lives, but on the day I met him, he accompanied me in my boat to the east of the city. Steve was excited because he hadn't had a boat for a few years, and this meant he could reach an area where he hadn't been for some time. 'Getting caught out by the tide is a real danger,' Steve explains. He advises us, as he does with anyone he has guided on the river, to watch for the water level and always have an escape route. We appear to be OK and our boat is our way on and off the Blackwall foreshore.

AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA

[4] Apart from a permit, the only tools required for mudlarking are a bucket and something to dig with. At 25°C, we are lucky with the weather, but even on rainy days, keen mudlarks can be found by the water's edge. 'Every day, as the water level rises and falls, it moves objects in the mud,' explains Steve. 'So it's possible to find really good things any time of the year.' Steve quickly fills his bucket with coins, Victorian pipes, old keys, and even a jar that he says came from an old food factory that used to be nearby. He knows exactly where to look and hardly digs down at all. After an hour, his top object is a metal toy from the 1800s. Much of what he finds goes to local museums. 'That's what anyone who goes mudlarking usually does,' says Steve.

[5] Steve explains why the river mud holds such treasure. 'It is anaerobic, which means it doesn't hold air. Therefore, anything in it stays in great condition,' he says. 'Once they are opened up to the air, however, their condition starts to break down, so mudlarking is all about keeping things that would otherwise fall to pieces'.

51. The main purpose of this reading passage is to _____.

a. talk about various pastimes of Londoners
b. talk about the increasing popularity of mudlarking in London
c. explain why mudlarking is becoming unpopular in London
d. complain about the people who make their living by mudlarking

52. According to the passage, in 18th-Century London, mudlarking was _____.

a. mainly done by the elderly
b. a popular hobby for boat owners
c. often practiced by restaurant staff
d. a way for some people to stay alive

53. According to the author, Steve Brooker _____.

a. has uncovered coins used in different periods of history
b. has discovered an animal's bones while mudlarking
c. hopes to continue this hobby for many more years
d. hopes he will find more bones soon

54. Steve advises other mudlarks to _____.

a. buy a boat to be able to find unusual things
b. have a plan in case of an emergency
c. travel up the river whenever they want to
d. practise their hobby on all parts of the river

55. "it" in paragraph 5 refers to the _____.

a. air b. treasure c. river mud d. great condition

TEXT IV

1 Venus, the Roman goddess of beauty and love, heard rumours of a mortal named Psyche who many claimed was more beautiful than herself. Venus was filled with jealousy and ordered her son, Cupid, to shoot Psyche with one of his magic arrows. This would make her fall in love with the most hideous monster on earth.

2 Cupid followed his mother's orders, but as he was taking aim at Psyche, his finger slipped. He pricked himself with the tip of his own arrow, causing him to immediately fall deeply in love with Psyche.

3 Cupid informed Psyche's family that it was the will of the gods for her to climb to a mountaintop and be united in marriage with a terrible monster. Bound by duty to the gods, they complied.

4 When Psyche reached the mountaintop, it was dark, but she felt a warm wind and was suddenly transported to a magnificent palace. After a relaxing bath and a delicious meal, accompanied by melodious music that seemed to come from nowhere, Psyche fell asleep.

5 For the several nights Cupid visited her, secretly replacing the monster as her husband. He always arrived after dark and departed before dawn, forbidding her to look upon him. Though she could not see her new husband, Psyche consented to the arrangement and eventually fell in love with him. Cupid told her it was unnecessary to view his face, provided she trusted him and returned his affections.

6 In time, however, Psyche found she could not constrain her curiosity. So one night, after Cupid had fallen asleep, she lit a lamp to illuminate his face. Upon seeing her husband's lovely face, her hand trembled with delight, causing a drop of hot oil to fall onto Cupid's shoulder, awakening him. Clutching his shoulder, he said, "I loved you and asked only for your trust; but when trust is gone, so love must depart." With that, he flew back to Venus, who greeted her son with a burst of rage for deceiving her and imprisoned him in her palace.

7 As soon as Cupid deserted Psyche, the magnificent palace vanished, leaving the poor girl alone on the cold peak. After wandering night and day in search of her lost love, Psyche finally approached the temple of Venus in desperation. There, the goddess angrily agreed to help only if Psyche succeeded in a difficult task. She commanded the trembling and fearful maiden, "Take this box and go to the underworld and ask the queen of that land, Persephone, to put a little of her beauty in the box for you to bring back to me."

8 Psyche set off on her venture, full of fear. Suddenly she heard a voice, which commanded her to give a coin to Charon, the ferryman, who would take her across the river Styx bordering the underworld. The voice also ordered her to give a cake to Cerberus, the fearsome three-headed watchdog that guarded the underworld. "Above all," said the voice, "once Persephone has placed some of her beauty in the box, do not open it!"

9 Psyche obeyed the voice's commands, and after collecting a bit of beauty from Persephone, she rushed to return the box to Venus. Once again she could not control her curiosity, so she lifted the lid of the box and was immediately overcome by a deep and heavy sleep.

10 Meanwhile, Cupid managed to escape the palace of Venus through a window, and no sooner had he flown outside than he saw Psyche's motionless body. He rushed to her side, embraced her, and lifted the heavy sleep from her body and placed it back into the box. He told her to carry the box to Venus and promised to return shortly, at which time all would be well.

11 Overjoyed, Psyche hurried to fulfil her task while Cupid flew to Jupiter, the king of the gods, and begged him to bless his marriage to Psyche. Jupiter not only agreed but also granted Psyche immortality to match that of her husband. Thus, with the marriage of Cupid and Psyche, Love and the Soul (which is what "Psyche means in Greek) were happily united at last.
